The Annual Copyright License for Curriculum & Instruction from CCC was designed to address the diverse licensing needs of educational technology (EdTech) providers, core and supplemental curriculum developers, and custom publishing companies, as well as U.S. State Departments of Education and K-12 school districts. The license provides print or digit rights to incorporate excerpts of high-quality fiction and nonfiction books, magazines, newspapers, online content, Spanish-language, and other types of works in curriculum and instructional materials, as well as online platforms such as learning management systems and EdTech applications. Included with the Annual Copyright License for Curriculum & Instruction is an easy-to-use, online tool that makes it easy to verify coverage under your CCC license.

With the demand from schools, districts, and teachers for high-quality, standards-aligned materials to customize curriculum comes a set of licensing challenges for schools and curriculum developers around how to obtain permission to use the texts in instruction (both in-person and remote). Similar demands come from EdTech companies that want to include such content in their K-12 ELA applications and services and developers of open educational resources (OERs) who need to access high-quality authentic content to supplement curriculum. Additionally, securing copyright permissions on an individual basis at scale and in time for in-class and remote learning is difficult and time-consuming, especially as needs fluctuate.
